

Venmyn invites you to a free workshop

Venmyn MD Andy Clay invites you to a free workshop on resource definition, to be held between 2pm and 5pm on the 12th of January 2010 at the University of Johannesburg. The workshop will form part of the 23rd Colloquium of African Geology, which is being held for the first time in South Africa.

The workshop will use a practical example to discuss how geologists define a resource. Attendees will be asked to determine resource ounces from an example stratigraphic column of a tabular orebody and discuss the mining method most appropriate for a particular orebody. Following from this, attendees will discuss what the valuation consequences are for their decisions to include or exclude waste material or adopt a particular mining method.

This workshop will provide attendees with an insight on how a techno-economic assessment of exploration results is performed, and is suitable for those interested in determining what the mining and financial implications are of exploration results.

To preregister for the workshop, please go to <http://cag23.co.za/workshops2.php>.